AFGHANISTAN

As Taliban Advances, the Future of Education is Uncertain

Never in the history of Afghanistan's conservative and remote corners have so many girls made it into higher education as in the past few years of relative peace. Now, amid swift and deadly advances by armed Taliban insurgents, these gains – and their lives – are under threat. To read more, click here.

EGYPT

Universities Adopt Academic Credit-Hour System

The Egyptian government has approved draft legislation enabling public universities to set the time required for a student to graduate in hours rather than academic years. Officials say this will allow some students to complete their degrees in three years instead of four and so reduce the cost of higher education to the state. To read more, click here.

FILMS & DOCUMENTARIES

For your viewing pleasure, we've selected the following documentaries, available through our partner Video Project:

Never too late: The Doc Severinsen Story – After three decades as the colorful bandleader to The Tonight Show Starring Johnny Carson, master trumpeter Doc Severinsen defies nature with a relentless schedule of touring and performing into his nineties. A musical icon traces his groundbreaking career and personal trials underscoring a life of inspiration and obsession. To view, click here.

"As a document of a major figure in the history of American television and intersections between that medium and music, its value is clear. Visually, the documentary adeptly weaves together recent footage with older archival film, video, and still images. Of course, students of the trumpet may find this documentary attractive, but its strongest academic appeal likely applies to those exploring American television history and its key performers."
