SOUTH AFRICA

Minister: Only 4% of students
that start grade 1
in South Africa

end up with degrees

Higher Education, Science And Innovation minister Blade Nzimande says the country needs to produce more graduate students if it is to meet its workforce needs. Nzimander said: "Out of 100 students, only 12 access our university system, and only six complete – four with a degree." To read more, click here.

UKRAINE

Ambassador

claims Russia is targeting universities

An analysis of satellite imagery provided by the U.S.

Department of State shows that Russia is deliberately attacking Ukrainian cultural heritage. This was stated by the Ambassador of Ukraine to the United States Oksana Markarova, who spoke at the national telethon, an Ukrinform correspondent reports. To read more, click here.

UNITED KINGDOM

Why post-Brexit UK should rejoin the EU's Erasmus+ exchange program

In this Op-ed piece for the Brookings Institute, Sanjay Patnaik writes: "Erasmus+ was once a fruitful opportunity for intercultural exchange, professional development, and intellectual enrichment for the U.K., and its loss (due to Brexit) has already had negative consequences for British students and scholars. But it isn't too late. There is still a potential path for the U.K. to rejoin the program and regain access to all its benefits. If it chooses not to, the country's once-rich academic and scholar environment is likely to continue to deteriorate." To read more, click here.

USA

Tenure is under attack in the US and spreading to other countries

In this June 8, 2022, Op-ed for University World News, Nathan M. Greenfield writes: “On 23 May, in the waning days of this academic year, the Louisiana House of Representatives passed a resolution which established the Task Force on Tenure in Postsecondary Education, making Louisiana the fourth US state in the past five years that has either abolished tenure or plans to do so.” He warns that this trend is spreading to other countries.
